Washington, DC- Congressman Steve King and Senator Chuck Grassley met with students from Shenandoah High School today. Congressman King discussed legislation he introduced to address the historic flooding experienced along the Missouri River last year. He also talked about immigration, health care, and efforts to pass a balanced budget.

"I enjoyed meeting with these young Iowans today," said King. "To give these students an example of how the legislative process works, Senator Grassley and I talked about our companion bills that would protect Shenandoah from future flooding along the Missouri River. It was a pleasure to meet with this group from Iowa and I hope they enjoyed the rest of their visit in our nation's capital."

Senator Grassley and Congressman King addressing Shenandoah High School Students

Congressman King and Shenandoah High School Students outside of the Capitol